Scene 2

[PICTURE: A heavenly throne room with brilliant light. Angels stand before God's presence, and among them a dark, cunning figure — Satan — steps forward with a sly expression. The contrast between divine light and Satan's shadow is striking. East African/Eritrean features. Warm watercolor children's Bible illustration.]

One day in the courts of heaven, the angels came to present themselves before God, and Satan came among them. The Lord asked Satan, "Have you considered my servant Job? There is no one on earth like him — blameless, upright, one who fears God and shuns evil." Satan sneered and replied, "Does Job fear God for nothing? You have put a hedge of protection around him. Take away everything he has, and he will surely curse you to your face."

God, in His sovereign wisdom, allowed the test. "Very well," He said to Satan. "Everything he has is in your power, but you must not lay a finger on Job himself." This was not because God was cruel or uncaring — it was because God knew the depth of Job's faith, even when Job himself did not yet understand how deep it ran. Sometimes God permits suffering not to destroy us, but to reveal what is truly inside us.

Scene 4

Then disaster struck with devastating speed. One messenger after another came running to Job with terrible news. "The Sabeans attacked and took your oxen and donkeys — your servants are dead!" Before he finished speaking, another arrived: "Fire fell from heaven and burned up your sheep and shepherds!" Then another: "The Chaldeans raided your camels and killed the servants!" Each blow came without warning, without reason, without mercy.

Tears stream down his face, yet his hands are open in surrender. East African/Eritrean features. Warm watercolor children's Bible illustration.]

Job's response in that moment of unimaginable grief reveals the depth of a faith forged over a lifetime. He tore his robe, shaved his head — the ancient signs of deepest mourning — and then he fell to the ground. But he did not fall in despair. He fell in worship. "Naked I came from my mother's womb," he said, "and naked I will depart. The Lord gave, and the Lord has taken away. Blessed be the name of the Lord." In his darkest hour, Job chose to bless God rather than blame Him.

[PICTURE: Satan returning to God's throne room, looking frustrated and angry. God sits calmly on His throne with an expression of quiet confidence. Light radiates from God while Satan stands in shadow. East African/Eritrean features. Warm watercolor children's Bible illustration.]

Satan returned to God's presence, defeated but not finished. God said, "Have you considered my servant Job? He still maintains his integrity, though you incited me against him to ruin him without reason." Satan snarled back, "Skin for skin! A man will give everything to save his own life. Strike his flesh and bones, and he will curse you." God permitted it: "He is in your hands. But you must spare his life." The battle for Job's soul was far from over.

His face shows immense physical agony, yet his eyes still look upward. East African/Eritrean features. Warm watercolor children's Bible illustration.]

Satan struck Job with painful sores from the soles of his feet to the crown of his head. The man who had once been the greatest in all the East now sat among ashes, using a broken piece of pottery to scrape his oozing wounds. The pain was relentless, the humiliation complete. Yet even here — broken, diseased, stripped of everything that once defined him — Job did not sin. Physical suffering was added to emotional devastation, but his faith, though shaken, held firm.

Job's wife, watching her husband suffer beyond all reason, broke under the weight of it. "Are you still holding on to your integrity?" she demanded. "Curse God and die!" Her words came not from hatred of God but from the agony of watching someone she loved being destroyed. Yet Job replied with remarkable composure, "You are talking like a foolish woman. Shall we accept good from God, and not trouble?" Even when the people closest to us lose faith, we must hold on to what we know to be true.

They tear their robes and throw dust in the air, weeping. East African/Eritrean features. Warm watercolor children's Bible illustration.]

When Job's three friends — Eliphaz, Bildad, and Zophar — heard about his suffering, they traveled from their homes to comfort him. But when they saw him from a distance, they could hardly recognize him. They wept aloud, tore their robes, and sprinkled dust on their heads. Then they did something remarkable: they sat with him on the ground for seven days and seven nights without saying a single word, because they saw how great his suffering was. Sometimes the most powerful comfort is simply being present.

Scene 11

[PICTURE: Job finally breaks his silence, his face anguished, mouth open in a cry of lament. His hands are raised to the dark sky above. His three friends watch in stunned silence as his pain pours out in words. East African/Eritrean features. Warm watercolor children's Bible illustration.]

After seven days of silence, Job finally spoke — and his words were raw with pain. He cursed the day he was born: "Why did I not perish at birth? Why was I not stillborn? Why is light given to those in misery?" Job did not curse God, but he questioned everything else. He was honest about his agony, refusing to pretend that everything was fine. There is a difference between cursing God and crying out to Him in pain — and God can handle our honest grief.

Then Eliphaz, the eldest friend, spoke first. His theology was simple and rigid: "Think about it, Job — who that was innocent ever perished? Those who plow evil and sow trouble reap the same. You must have done something wrong. Confess your sin and God will restore you." His words sounded wise but carried a cruel assumption — that all suffering is direct punishment for sin. This false equation has tormented innocent sufferers throughout history.

[PICTURE: Bildad and Zophar taking turns speaking harshly to Job. Their gestures are aggressive and condemning. Job sits with his head bowed, wounded by their words. The scene feels like a courtroom where Job is the accused. East African/Eritrean features. Warm watercolor children's Bible illustration.]

Bildad and Zophar followed with even harsher accusations. Bildad declared, "If your children sinned, God gave them what they deserved!" Zophar added, "God is actually punishing you less than you deserve." What began as comfort became condemnation. Round after round of speeches — each friend insisting that Job must be guilty, each argument more cutting than the last. They had come to comfort but stayed to judge, proving that bad theology can turn compassion into cruelty.

[PICTURE: Job rising to his feet with passionate intensity, arms spread wide, defending himself before his three friends. His eyes burn with conviction and righteous anger. He looks both broken and defiant, demanding justice. East African/Eritrean features. Warm watercolor children's Bible illustration.]

Job refused to accept false guilt. "I know I am not wicked!" he cried. "I have walked with integrity. I helped the poor, the widow, the orphan. I turned from evil." He was not claiming sinless perfection — he was insisting that his suffering was not punishment for some hidden crime. Job demanded his day in court with God, longing for an explanation. His faith was not blind submission; it was wrestling honestly with a God he trusted but could not understand.

The stars above seem impossibly distant, representing the silence of God. East African/Eritrean features. Warm watercolor children's Bible illustration.]

In his loneliest moments, Job expressed what many believers feel but are afraid to say aloud: "I cry out to You, God, but You do not answer. I stand up, but You merely look at me." The silence of God in suffering is perhaps the hardest trial of all. Job felt abandoned, unseen, unheard — yet he kept speaking to God, not away from Him. Even his complaints were a form of faith, because he still believed God was listening, even in the silence.

His hands move expressively as he addresses both Job and the three older men, who look surprised. East African/Eritrean features. Warm watercolor children's Bible illustration.]

After the three friends fell silent, a young man named Elihu — who had been listening with growing frustration — spoke up. He was angry at Job for justifying himself rather than God, and angry at the three friends for condemning Job without real answers. Elihu offered a different perspective: perhaps suffering can be a teacher, not just a punishment. Perhaps God uses trials to speak to us, to refine us, to draw us closer to Himself before we fall further away.

Then, out of the whirlwind, God Himself spoke. Not through a prophet, not through an angel — God's own voice thundered from the storm. "Who is this that obscures my plans with words without knowledge?" The Creator of the universe had been listening all along, and now He broke His silence. But God did not come to explain — He came to reveal. He did not answer Job's questions about why he suffered. Instead, He asked questions of His own that would change everything.

[PICTURE: Magnificent cosmic imagery — the earth being formed, stars being flung into space, the ocean being given its boundaries. God's voice echoes through creation. Job is tiny in the corner, gazing up at the vastness of God's works with wonder and awe. East African/Eritrean features. Warm watercolor children's Bible illustration.]

"Where were you when I laid the earth's foundation?" God asked. "Who marked off its dimensions? Who shut up the sea behind doors? Have you commanded the morning to appear? Have the gates of death been shown to you?" Question after question revealed the infinite gap between God's wisdom and human understanding. God was not mocking Job — He was showing him that the same God who orchestrates the cosmos is the one managing Job's story, with a wisdom too vast for any human mind to contain.

[PICTURE: Powerful images of wild animals — a lion hunting, a mountain goat on a cliff, an eagle soaring, a mighty horse charging into battle — all shown as God describes His sovereign care over all creation. Nature in its wild, untamed glory. East African/Eritrean features. Warm watercolor children's Bible illustration.]

God continued, painting a breathtaking portrait of His sovereignty over all creation. He described the wild donkey running free, the eagle soaring on thermals, the war horse charging fearlessly into battle, the hawk spreading its wings by God's wisdom. Every creature, every storm, every star — all held in God's hand. The message was clear: if God governs the entire universe with such intricate care and wisdom, can He not also be trusted with one man's suffering, even when that man cannot see the reason?

[PICTURE: God describing the mighty Behemoth — a massive, powerful creature like a hippo or dinosaur — and Leviathan — a fearsome sea dragon with scales and fire. Job watches in amazement, completely overwhelmed by God's power over even the most terrifying creatures. East African/Eritrean features. Warm watercolor children's Bible illustration.]

God spoke of Behemoth — the mightiest creature on land, with bones like iron and limbs like bronze — and Leviathan, the fearsome sea creature that no human could tame. "Can you pull in Leviathan with a fishhook? Can you make a pet of him?" The point was profound: if humans cannot even control God's creatures, how can they expect to control God's plans or fully comprehend His purposes? Our smallness is not a shame — it is an invitation to trust the One who is immeasurably greater.

[PICTURE: Job restored — healthy, radiant, surrounded by new flocks of animals, a beautiful rebuilt home, and new children playing around him. His wife smiles beside him. The scene is abundant and joyful, bathed in warm golden sunlight. But Job's face shows wisdom, not just happiness — the depth of one who has walked through fire. East African/Eritrean features. Warm watercolor children's Bible illustration.]

After Job prayed for his friends, God restored his fortunes — giving him twice what he had before. Fourteen thousand sheep, six thousand camels, a thousand yoke of oxen, a thousand donkeys. He was blessed with seven new sons and three daughters, the most beautiful women in all the land. Job lived a hundred and forty more years and saw four generations of his descendants. But the true restoration was not material — it was relational. Job knew God in a way he never had before. The deepest blessings are not things; they are transformation.

[PICTURE: An older, wiser Job sitting peacefully under a tree at sunset, with his grandchildren gathered around him. He tells them his story with gentle authority. The sky is painted in deep oranges and purples. His face carries the lines of suffering but also deep peace and trust. A Bible lies open on his lap. East African/Eritrean features. Warm watercolor children's Bible illustration.]

The story of Job teaches us something the world rarely admits: sometimes terrible things happen to faithful people, and there is no simple explanation. Suffering is not always punishment. God is sovereign even when life makes no sense. True faith is not faith that is never tested — it is faith that endures through the testing. It is okay to bring your honest questions, your anger, your grief to God — He can handle it all. But in the end, we must trust that His wisdom is greater than our understanding, His love deeper than our pain, and His purposes grander than our small perspective can see.

Discussion Questions / 討論問題

1. Why do you think God allowed Satan to test Job, even though Job was faithful? What does this tell us about how God views suffering differently than we do?

2. Job's friends assumed that all suffering is punishment for sin. Have you ever seen people make this same mistake today? How should we respond to someone who is suffering?

[illegible]

3. God never explained to Job why he suffered. Why do you think God chose to reveal His power and sovereignty instead of giving a direct answer? Is that enough for you?
